The Education Research Section is announcing the Summer 2023 Research in Education Policy Internship. This full-time 7-week program, which will run from June 12-July 28 and is open to all Princeton undergraduates, will introduce interns to both quantitative and qualitative research in education through students assisting with ongoing Education Research Section research projects related to education policy.

Activities will include participation in a weekly seminar series, training in multiple research methods used in education policy, and exposure to current issues in education policy and research.

Program Location: We will offer both in-person and remote internship opportunities.

Application: Please send a cover letter describing your interest in the program and any prior research experience or training (none is required), resume, and unofficial transcript to ers@princeton.edu. We will begin reviewing applications on April 10th.

Compensation: Students will be compensated for $600/week for full-time work.

Sincerely,
